

Red Flags in a Background Investigation

In the context of a background investigation, a red flag can be classified as a piece of information which represents any sort of potential misrepresentation or omission of fact, which, if known by a client, could be a value when making a critical decision. While most people would not do business with the proverbial axe murderer, there are numerous other red flags that can be uncovered during a background investigation which can ultimately lead to making better decisions.

